Poems

Nii Ayikwei Parkes

To cite this article: Nii Ayikwei Parkes (2002) Poems, Wasafiri, 17:37, 36-38, DOI: 10.1080/02690050208589806
To link to this article: https://doi.org/10.1080/02690050208589806

Published online: 18 Jul 2008.

Submit your article to this journal

Article views: 9

View related articles
Nii Ayikwei Parkes

Ghana by air

Let the dry savannah winds grab you by the hair and drag you stumbling through tough clumps of cow-nibbled grass.

Did you see the children streak by on bikes – two or sometimes three on the same?
Did you see the striking garments energised by night dances?

Now the green of the forest will sweep you across the secret passages of Ashanti pride into the rich red depths of palm nut soup.

Did you see a woman drag her husband home by the cuff – insulting him all the way?
Did you hear the market traders hurling prices down the street?

The lights of Accra will confound you as you circle dreamily round haphazard houses arranged to fit sprouting family trees.

Did you hear the blaring horns – sometimes angry, sometimes friendly?
Did you see two lovers heading for Labadi beach?

Follow them lift the hem of the sea plunge...

you have reached the centre of the world.
Orange flesh

The acid burn of life
Is the squirt
From an orange peel
In your eyes.

You can close your eyes
And stop
And live forever
Inert
Protected

Or you can choose To squirt
And endure the pain
That precedes
The juice
Of orange flesh.

jazz at 5 am

I come here from my troubles to flee; Deep
in a murky pool of bobbing heads I let the notes splay themselves across my soul, define sound in their own off-key way... responding to plucking fingers jumping keys and exuberant skins as voices play catch across the dim room, twist my besotted ears and leave my head clear for dreams of tomorrow.

body language

tears in silence irregular breaths stretched out across recollections nothing divulged as though speaking of pain felt would bring repercussions body doubled to protect present from past replayed from memory discussion stilled as though Midas touched all speech and made silence golden

tears in silence
suffering rendered in pure body language

River Dance

Meet me down by the river
When the moon sits
In the arms of the old neem tree.

Come dragging your feet
In the grass with your hands Twirling in the warm night.

Listen for the sound of restless fish Joyous
In the shimmering water.

You will find me with my eyes Alight
With the mischief of fireflies
My body as patient
As a leaf ripple.

Maybe tonight we will dance.

Sakumono Magic

a silver morning sky is the reflection that hums around his thighs.

and he moves not in the slow-warming grasp of the flowing heaven he encroaches so boldly

from his hands drip stringy tentacles which he holds high:
proud son of Sakumono

...then the sun flicks gold over his bare back as he swiftly casts his spell slowly he pulls in his scales of silver and threads his way to the bank.

Phantom wars

They came
With their craftsmen
And draughtsmen
Their soothsayers
And bricklayers Cartographers
And lithographers
And redefined our boundaries

They came
With laughing liquid
And angry powder
To confuse our kinsmen
And take us captive

They came Trading
And scheming
Laughing
And stealing
Making prisoners of our kings
Drawing blood
And drawing lines...

They slit
Our kingdoms
Into countries
And made nonsense
Of our wars

Festival

Jammed up junctions Barrage of brake lights Harmony of horns...
Single string of saloons
In a festival of traffic; Sweating stress under the morning’s hot hurry.

They came
With laughing liquid
And angry powder
To confuse our kinsmen
And take us captive

They came Trading
And scheming
Laughing
And stealing
Making prisoners of our kings
Drawing blood
And drawing lines...

They slit
Our kingdoms
Into countries
And made nonsense
Of our wars